CITY INCOME TAX

Benton Harbor has company

Charlotte voters to decide income tax to support streets

By LOUISE WREGE
HP Staff Writer

CHARLOTTE, Mich. — Voters in Benton Harbor aren't the only ones who on Tuesday will be deciding if their city will be the first one since 1994 to levy a city income tax on businesses, residents and nonresidents who work in the city.

Voters in Charlotte will also go to the polls to make that decision.

Only 22 of Michigan's 279 cities have a city income tax.

"Our motivation is to raise money for maintenance and reconstruction of streets," City Manager Gregg Guetschow said. Charlotte is 21 miles southwest of Lansing.

He said funding street improvement through a city income tax is attractive because a lot of the people who work in Charlotte don't live in the city.

"That's one of the merits of a city income tax – the ability to tax nonresidents," Guetschow said. "They drive on our streets to get to work and to do other things that they are doing in town here. They benefit from good streets as much as our residents do.

"Here, we're imposing a tax that taxes outside of our boundaries. That means the tax burden is not falling exclusively on city residents, as would be the case with a millage increase."

In Sunday's HP

Benton Harbor's proposed city income tax has proved to be a hot topic. On Sunday, The Herald-Palladium will publish several stories on the proposal, which city residents will vote on Tuesday.

- City commissioners weigh in.
- Businesses and business organizations voice their opinions.
- Two cities that are about the same size as Benton Harbor and that have a city income tax give their views.
- City Commissioner Trenton Bowens and Mayor James Hightower offer point and counterpoint perspectives on the Opinion Page.

Tender lovin' care for a Van Buren dune

County turns to a geologist to find out how to protect and stabilize a migrating dune next to subdivision

By ROD SMITH
H-P Correspondent

SOUTH HAVEN — It will take educating the public and closing most of the trails to protect the large sand dune straddling the North Point Land Preserve and Syndicate Park subdivision.

That's according to a report detailed to the Van Buren County Board of Commissioners last week by geology professor Deanna Van Dijk and student Lucas Vanderbilt of Calvin College. Commissioners had contracted with them to study the dune for $5,500 and make recommendations about stabilizing it.

The dune, which is in South Haven Township south of the city of South Haven, is mostly owned by the county. It has moved 400 feet since 1938.

"It gave us a glimpse of what's going on there," County Administrator Douglas Cultra said of the report.

Pushed by the wind, dunes that aren't stable move. Two houses already have been engulfed, Cultra said. "It can be dangerous to those people that live close to those dunes."

Four more houses are threatened. "Basically the dunes are at their doorsteps," Van Dijk said.

Yet dunes are also beautiful and offer recreational opportunities for people, including, in this case, Lake Michigan beach access.

Dune vegetation is fragile and can be harmed by foot traffic or all-terrain vehicles. When a dune is stripped of vegetation, it can slowly be moved by prevailing winds.

"The more plants and vegetation on a dune, the more stable it becomes," Cultra said.

"There is quite a high level of human impact on those dunes," Van Dijk said.

This is both from pedestrian travel and ATVs. "Where people are walking is contributing to more wind erosion on the dune," Van Dijk said. ATVs add to this problem.

It's not actually one dune.

"It's an area of dunes," Van Dijk said. There's a

Consolino's out of SH mayoral race

He apparently balks at answering residency question

By BECKY KARK
For the Herald-Palladium

CONSOLINO

SOUTH HAVEN — It appears that the mayoral race in South Haven is no longer a race.

Challenger Frank Consolino has dropped out of next Tuesday's contest, leaving Mayor Bob Burr as the sole candidate.

Consolino, 25, withdrew from the election on Tuesday, according to a memo that City Clerk Amanda Morgan sent to city officials. His withdrawal may have had something to do with the questioning of his residency.

"The clerk's office received information questioning Frank Consolino's city residency," Morgan said. "Because the city charter requires residency to hold office as mayor, it was my duty to inquire further."

When she asked Consolino to meet her at City Hall and make a sworn statement regarding his residence, he declined by email, stating, "I am withdrawing from the election at this time."

Consolino could not be reached for comment on Friday, but his wife indicated that he withdrew because of the strain the election has had on their family.

In October Consolino pleaded guilty to three felony charges of marijuana distribution. Police allege he sold undercover police marijuana this summer. At a recent candidates forum, Consolino publicly apologized for his behavior that led to his arrest.

Although Consolino has withdrawn from the mayoral race, his name will still appear on the ballot, and people can cast votes for him, Morgan said.

"It is too late for Mr. Consolino's name to be removed from the ballot," she said. "The deadline for a candidate to withdraw from an election is three days after the deadline for filing nominating petitions."

If he is elected, he will have to prove he resides in the city. If that doesn't happen, then the City Council would appoint a new mayor, according to the city charter.

CASS COUNTY CIRCUIT COURT

Woman sent to prison for providing deadly heroin

By DEBRA HAIGHT
HP Correspondent

CASSOPOLIS — One of two Niles-area residents charged with delivering heroin to an acquaintance who later died of an overdose has been sentenced in Cass Circuit Court.

HEFT

Two people are dead and in the ground because of Kali Heft.

VICTOR FITZ
Cass County prosecutor

Kali Heft, 23, of Alice Court in Niles, pleaded guilty to delivery and possession of heroin and was sentenced Friday to a term of 29 months to 20 years in prison for conviction on the delivery charge. She was sentenced to credit for time served, 176 days, for possession of heroin.

Heft and a co-defendant, Joseph Dumond, 25, have admitted to providing heroin to Phillip Swanstrom, an acquaintance, on June 5, 2012, at a residence in the Niles area. Swanstrom, 32, was later found unresponsive and died.

Dumond had been scheduled to be sentenced Friday via teleconferencing from prison, but technical difficulties kept that from taking place. Cass Circuit Judge Michael Dodge set his sentencing for next Friday, Nov. 8, and ordered that it be done in person and not by teleconferencing.

Both Dumond and Heft were sentenced in October in Berrien County Trial Court to the same prison terms of 29 months to 20 years for delivering heroin to another Niles area man, Ryan Wetzel, 23, in January at the Niles Inn. He was found dead in his hotel room. Dumond is already in prison but Heft, who was sentenced a week ago in Berrien, has remained in jail pending the sentencing in Cass County.

Swanstrom's mother, Carol, spoke before the sentencing and had strong words for Heft. "Shame, shame on your life, Kali Heft," Swanstrom said. "You've ruined any chance of having a full life all because of drugs."

Swanstrom said Heft and Dumond hounded her son, who had been trying to get away from drugs.

"I hope his face is burned into your mind, I hope you always think of what you have done," she told Heft.

"I hope you always remember this day. Phil's life is over forever. You and Joseph Dumond have earned the name of the deadly duo," she added. "We must send a statement that we are done with drug users, that we are done with drug dealers and are done with drugs. ... The message must be sent that justice has prevailed."

Cass County Prosecutor Victor Fitz said Heft's and Dumond's delivery of heroin to Swanstrom was a "sentence of death" and noted that the two had delivered heroin to another man who had died of an overdose.

"Two people are dead and in the ground because of Kali Heft," he said. "She helped to kill two people, not just one. It will be on her conscience forever."

Judge Dodge called the situation "unbelievably tragic" but noted that his hands were tied as to giving Heft a longer sentence. He said the plea agreement reached between the prosecutor's office and defense attorney Daniel Grow called for Heft's sentence to be the same as the one she got in Berrien County, and for it to be concurrent with that sentence.

In addition to the prison term, Heft must pay $1,266 in fines and costs. Dodge reserved declaring an amount of restitution, which could be over $20,000, until Grow can review the numbers.

Reinstatement of abortion law leaves few options in Texas

By CHRISTOPHER SHERMAN and CHRIS TOMLINSON
Associated Press

Rex C. Curry / AP

Kathy Bass, her son Justin Bass (left), and Jin Lee wait to cross the street after holding vigil outside of the Southwestern Women's Surgery Center in Dallas on Friday, following a federal appeals court ruling Thursday that allowed most of the state's new abortion restrictions to take effect. While Southwestern will still be able to perform abortions, twelve of the 32 clinics in the state that don't have doctors with admitting privileges at nearby hospitals will not be able to, though they can provide other services.

HARLINGEN, Texas — In a Texas abortion clinic, about a dozen women waited Friday to see the doctor, already aware that they would not be able to end their pregnancies there.

A day after a federal appeals court allowed most of the state's new abortion restrictions to take effect during a legal challenge, about a third of Texas' clinics were barred from performing the procedure.

Thursday's ruling made Texas the fourth and largest state to enforce a provision requiring doctors who perform abortions to have admitting privileges in a nearby hospital. In places such as the Rio Grande Valley and rural West Texas, the mandate put hundreds of miles between many women and abortion providers.

Anti-abortion groups welcomed the court's surprise decision, which they insisted would protect women's health. The ruling came just days after a lower federal court put the law on hold.

If women did not know about the ruling before they arrived at Reproductive Services of Harlingen, clinic administrator Angie Tristan told them. Abortions are a two-day process in Texas. On Fridays, women arrive here for their initial consultation with the doctor. On Saturdays, they return for the procedure.

Despite Tristan's explanation that they would not be able to have abortions on Saturday, some women decided to stay on the slim hope that something would change.

A panel of judges at the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans ruled that Texas can enforce the law while a lawsuit challenging the restrictions moves forward.

The law that the Legislature passed in July also bans abortions at 20 weeks and, beginning in September 2014, requires doctors to perform all abortions in surgical facilities.

But it's the provision about admitting privileges that has idled Dr. Lester Minto's hands here in Harlingen.

After the law was adopted, the clinic began preparing to close, shredding old patient records and drawing down their inventory, ordering only enough supplies to keep going for a month at a time.

Minto, who has been performing abortions for 30 years, predicted the women he sees would take dangerous measures in their desperation. He made clear he would not perform abortions Saturday if they remain prohibited, but he did not rule out taking other steps in the future.

Michigan man claims he told U.S. where bin Laden was

By JEFF KAROUB
Associated Press

DETROIT — A Michigan man claims he tipped federal investigators to the location of Osama bin Laden's compound in Pakistan eight years before his killing and has hired attorneys to help him collect the $25 million reward.

The al-Qaida leader was killed in May 2011 during a Navy SEAL raid on the three-story compound. U.S. officials have said the house wasn't built until 2005, and Pakistani officials have said they believe he moved there in the summer of that year.

A letter obtained Friday by The Associated Press from a Chicago-based law firm representing Grand Rapids resident Tom Lee says the 63-year-old gem merchant reported the location of bin Laden's compound in Abbottabad in 2003.

A request to speak with Lee and Michael Kanovitz, the attorney who signed the letter, was made to the law firm. The FBI didn't immediately comment.

According to the letter, Lee, a U.S. citizen of Egyptian heritage, shared the information with customs and FBI agents. Lee reported that the Pakistani agent "was a member of a family that Mr. Lee had done business with for decades," the letter said, and the agent and his family opposed bin Laden.

The letter said Lee, who lives in Grand Rapids, made "numerous attempts" to claim his reward but received no responses.

"Mr. Lee precisely identified the whereabouts of the most notorious terrorist of our era, a man responsible for the World Trade Center attacks, the most devastating act of terror committed on American soil, and numerous other assaults on Americans," the letter said.

Lee told The Grand Rapids Press in an email Friday that he couldn't understand why the government waited to act.

"It disturbs me, and it should disturb every American, that I told them exactly where bin Laden was in 2003, and they let him live another eight years," he said in the email.

Bin Laden had slipped away from U.S. forces in the Afghan mountains of Tora Bora in 2001, and the CIA believed he had taken shelter in the lawless tribal areas of Pakistan. The U.S. was eventually able to find bin Laden by tracing his courier, Ibrahim al-Kuwaiti.

West Point hosts first wedding between 2 men

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP) — Two graduates of West Point are set to become the first men to marry each other at the storied military academy.

Larry Choate III, class of 2009, will marry Daniel Lennox, class of 2007, on Saturday at the U.S. Military Academy's Cadet Chapel. West Point hosted two same-sex weddings of women in late 2012, more than a year after New York legalized gay marriage. But this is the first time two men are being wed at West Point.

"It's maybe one more barrier that's pushed over a little bit, or maybe one more glass ceiling that's shattered that makes it easier for the next couple," Choate said Friday.

Choate, 27, said the landmark Gothic chapel at the Hudson Valley academy is a special place and it's an honor to be wed there. He taught Sunday school at the chapel as a cadet and always thought of it as the place he would get married, if he could.

The pair did not know each other as cadets, but met later through a mutual friend. Both men are out of the military. Lennox, 28, from Washington, D.C, is getting his master's degree in business administration at Harvard University in Massachusetts. Choate, from Seattle, works at the business school there.

Meet 3 Civil War-era women

By HP STAFF

DOWAGIAC — A program entitled "Three Michigan Women in the Civil War" will be presented at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday as the Dowagiac Area History Museum's Fall Lecture Series continues.

The museum is at the corner of Division and West Railroad streets.

The presentation by Christina Hirn Arseneau, museum director at the Heritage Museum and Cultural Center in St. Joseph, will look at three women who called Michigan home during the Civil War and were among some 20,000 women who contributed to the war effort.

One was an ardent abolitionist who gave lectures to raise money for the troops fighting to end slavery, one marched off to battle with her stepsons and worked as a teacher and a nurse, and one disguised herself as a man to serve on the front lines.

Programs are free to museum members and $5 for nonmembers.

For more information, call the Dowagiac Area History Museum at 783-2560 or visit www.dowagiacmuseum.info.

Two Cass inmates earn diplomas

By HP STAFF

CASSOPOLIS — Two Cass County inmates were awarded their high school diplomas Thursday, having completed their high school education while in the Cass County jail.

Cass County Sheriff Joseph Underwood said Elvin Pasley, 34, of Dowagiac and Nathaniel Hancock, 18, of Elkhart, Ind., took advantage of high school courses offered at the jail to get their diplomas from Cassopolis High School. Their teacher was Helene Hoover.

Pasley completed his diploma program in nine months, and Hancock in four months, Underwood said.

Hancock told the sheriff he was previously not motivated to complete his education, but when he saw the opportunity offered while in jail he decided to make something positive out of a bad situation.

Pasley told the sheriff that the Cass County jail offered him the chance to do something he should have done several years ago. He told the sheriff he has been in other jails and had never before been offered the chance to get his high school diploma while incarcerated. He said he hopes his hard work will pay off with a good job when he gets out of jail.

A leak at City Hall

It's the old-fashioned kind, made manifest by rain

By LOUISE WREGE
HP Staff Writer

BENTON HARBOR — The steady pelting of rain this week has pointed out a problem Benton Harbor City Hall has – a leaky roof.

Emergency Manager Tony Saunders said contractors examined the roof Friday, and he is waiting for them to come back with quotes.

"It's a leaky roof – rain uncovered it for me," he said. "We'll get it fixed."

City Commissioner Mary-Alice Adams said she is upset the roof is leaking because it was fixed by the previous emergency manager, Joseph Harris, less than two years ago.

She said the roof was leaking so badly on Thursday that the steps leading to the second floor were blocked off and trash cans were on the steps to catch the drips. She posted two short videos on her Facebook page showing the leaks.

"Joe Harris spent thousands of dollars on the roof," she said. "It should still be under warranty."

She said it was also leaking in the emergency manager's office.

Appeals court affirms Kwasny's convictions

By SCOTT AIKEN
HP Staff Writer

The Michigan Court of Appeals has affirmed the convictions of a former Bridgman woman who is serving three prison sentences for check fraud and two perjury offenses.

Betsy Kwasny, 42, was found guilty in Berrien County Trial Court in 2011 of swindling two young women and a retired couple in check scams and credit card fraud in 2008 and 2009.

As a result of testimony in that trial, she was charged with perjury and subornation of perjury, inducing Sarah Brunke to lie as a defense witness. Kwasny was tried on the perjury charges and found guilty.

KWASNY

She was sentenced as an habitual offender to 3-21 years in prison for uttering and publishing a fraudulent check, and to 210 days for two other convictions. Later, she was sentenced to a pair of 5-22 1/2-year terms for the perjury offenses.

The sentences for perjury run at the same time but are consecutive to the term for uttering and publishing.

While rejecting Kwasny's appeal arguments, a three-member appeals court panel remanded the uttering and publishing case to Trial Court for a new order of restitution.

In that case, Kwasny argued unsuccessfully in her appeal that evidence of her prior criminal record was allowed as evidence, and that Trial Court Judge Charles LaSata erred by allowing a single trial for several similar charges.

The appeals court also rejected several other claims but directed that the restitution order of $32,250 be replaced by a new order for $27,250.

> A defendant may not perpetrate chaos in her own trial and then obtain a mistrial on the basis of prejudice.
> APPEALS COURT

In the perjury case, Kwasny's appeal failed on the claim that the trial court erred in making the sentences for perjury consecutive to the other sentence.

No objection was raised at sentencing, so the issue was not preserved for appeal, the appeals court said.

The appeals court said in its opinion that LaSata did not make a mistake in denying a mistrial after Kwasny made prejudicial remarks during an outburst in the presence of the jury.

"A defendant may not perpetrate chaos in her own trial and then obtain a mistrial on the basis of prejudice," the appeals court said.

New Buffalo recall effort hits signature phase

By SCOTT AIKEN
HP Staff Writer

ST. JOSEPH — Two members of the New Buffalo City Council who are targeted for recall did not challenge approved ballot wording during an allotted 10-day period, according to the Berrien County clerk's office.

The county Election Commission held a clarity hearing on Oct. 18 and approved wording on ballots seeking an election to recall council members Margaret "Migs" Murray and Albert Lawson. Murray is mayor.

They had until Monday to file appeals but did not do so.

Appeals of ballot wording approved by the three-member commission are decided in circuit court.

Recall organizers have 180 days from the date wording is approved to collect enough valid signatures to trigger an election.

Under state law, the signatures must be gathered within a 60-day period of the 180-day time frame.

The county clerk's office said a minimum of 144 signatures is needed to trigger a recall election.

The number is equal to 25 percent of New Buffalo voters who cast ballots for governor in the 2010 election

The recall effort was organized by Susan Gotfried of New Buffalo.

The Election Commission approved wording on two sets of recall petitions.

One set seeks an election to remove Murray and Lawson from office for voting on Aug. 21, 2012, to appoint then-Mayor William "Rusty" Geisler city manager.

The petition states that Geisler was appointed without the job being posted or advertised and that he does not have a bachelor's degree as required in the job description.

The other set of petitions states that the two officials voted at a special meeting on May 18, 2013, three days before a regularly scheduled City Council meeting, to fill

As a result of the action, Warren Peterson, a council member defeated in an election on the previous Tuesday, voted on who filled the vacancy, according to the petitions, and newly elected Councilman Pete Weber did not have input.

Fundraiser Tuesday for burned-out family

By LOUISE WREGE
HP Staff Writer

BENTON HARBOR — A fundraiser for the mother and six children burned out of their apartment Tuesday at Berrien Homes in Benton Township will be 5-7 p.m. Sunday at Word of Truth, 1209 Pipestone Road.

Kateesha Adams of Benton Harbor said six performances are planned. The performers will be two singers, Yakima Shepard and Gwen Norwood; two speakers on hope, Taurus Montgomery and Kenisha Nichols; a praise dancer, Ra'Keisha Jackson; and Ardale Clark, who will give a drama presentation.

"I thought it was important as a city and as a child of God to assist in any way," said Adams, who is hosting the fundraiser with the city through her organization, Identity N Christ. She is also an urban ministry director with YoungLife Benton Harbor.

Adams said Keone Goss, 1738 Council Court, and her six children, ages 3 through 10, lost all their material possessions in the fire that destroyed their apartment. Goss was home at the time with three of the children, a brother and a cousin. All escaped unharmed.

Goss said she is overwhelmed by all the love and support from the community.

"I want everyone to know I appreciate everything everybody is doing for me," she said Friday. "It's been a real blessing to me."

She said Friday night was the last night the American Red Cross was paying for a hotel room for her family. She said she is uncertain where she will stay Saturday night.

"I've been steady filling out applications, but there's nothing out there," she said.

She said she has family in the Benton Harbor area but they all already have full houses.

During the fundraiser, Adams is collecting clothing for the family and is in need of the following clothes: mother, adult women's size 9 clothing and shoes, size 7 (women) or size 5 (men); Keondre Goss, age 10, size 10 clothing and size 5 shoes; Tommie Ellis, age 8, size 8 clothing and size 1 shoes; KaMarrion Goss, age 6, size 7 clothing and size 11 shoes; Lil Marion Goss, age 6, size 7 clothing and size 12 shoes; Keone Goss, age 4, size 5 clothing and size 10 shoes; and LaMarrion Goss, age 3, size 5 clothing and size 9 shoes.

Besides clothes, Adams said she is accepting donations of gift cards, cash, food and general household items.

Cash donations can also be made to "The Goss Family Benefit Fund" at any Fifth Third bank.

For more information, call Adams at 332-4764.

William Shimer, part-time lecturer in management and organizational development at Northeastern University, is one of thousands of part-time college professors who are joining labor unions, a growing trend in higher education that's boosting the ranks of organized labor and giving a voice to teachers who complain about low pay and a lack of job security at some of the nation's top universities.

Growing number of adjunct, part-time professors join unions

By SAM HANANEL
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Thousands of part-time college professors are joining labor unions, a growing trend in higher education that's boosting the ranks of organized labor and giving voice to teachers who complain about low pay and a lack of job security at some of the nation's top universities.

The move to unionize at campuses from Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., to Tufts University near Boston follows a shift in hiring practices at colleges that rely more than ever on adjunct faculty to teach classes.

Last month, adjuncts at Tufts became the latest to join the 2.1 million-member Service Employees International Union, which has been aggressively targeting college instructors. Adjuncts at Georgetown formed a union with SEIU in May, and part-time instructors at nearby American University joined the union last year.

SEIU now represents more than 18,000 members at 10 colleges and universities, compared with 14,000 five years ago. The union is preparing to file for elections at more colleges in the Los Angeles, Seattle and Boston areas.

Adjunct professors now make up more than half of all college faculty nationwide; in the 1970s, about 70 percent of college instructors were tenured professors or on a track to tenure.

Unlike full professors, most adjuncts earn just a few thousand dollars per class, with scant benefits and little job security.

"What started out decades ago as a way to supplement experience on college campuses by using adjunct professors has flipped," said Malini Cadambi, SEIU's national director of higher education. "They are the majority of faculty labor on many campuses now, and their position has not improved."

Kip Lornell, an adjunct music professor at George Washington University in the District of Columbia, has been teaching students for 25 years and is the author of 13 books on American music. He earns less than $23,000 a year teaching three classes at GWU. By contrast, a full professor at the university earns an average salary of $156,000 a year, according to data compiled by the American Association of University Professors.

Lornell says conditions have improved since GWU adjuncts formed a union in 2006 and won a contract two years later. Salaries are 20 percent higher, and the university now pays minimum rates of $3,500 or $4,030, per 3-credit course, depending on the lecturer's degree. The university also now has to go through certain procedures before deciding not to bring an instructor back.

"There's no question it's because of the union contract," Lornell said.

Higher education has been a rare bright spot in labor organizing in recent years as union membership has dwindled to 11.3 percent of the overall workforce and 6.6 percent in the private sector.

The American Federation of Teachers has added more than 50,000 new members in higher education since 2000. The majority of that growth has come in "contingent faculty," a category that includes part-time adjuncts, graduate assistants and full-time non-tenured faculty.

"We've identified this as one area we're going to put significant resources into," said Craig Smith, AFT's director of higher education.

Unions say they are not seeing quite as much push-back from colleges as they do in many private-sector union campaigns.

At Georgetown, administrators at the Jesuit university decided to take a neutral position on the union vote. But there was more resistance at Bentley University in Boston, where SEIU lost a unionization vote this month, 100-98.

"We made it clear in our statement and in communications with faculty that we do not feel it is necessary to unionize," Bentley spokeswoman Michele Walsh said. "We encouraged those faculty who agreed with this stance to vote accordingly."

Universities used to call on adjunct professors in mostly technical fields such as allied health, journalism or business to bring students more practical training. Many adjuncts still have full-time jobs and teach a class on the side. But as tenure-track positions decline, those who want to make teaching a full-time career have to cobble together jobs at multiple colleges and universities to make ends meet.

By TOM KRISHER
AP Auto Writer

DETROIT — Aging baby boomers. Couples with small kids. Single people with dogs.

All three groups love compact crossover SUVs, utility vehicles built mainly on small-car frames that are among the hottest-selling vehicles in the U.S.

So far this year, sales of the versatile, high-sitting hatchbacks such as the Honda CR-V, Ford Escape and Toyota RAV4 are up more than 20 percent.

From 2000 through last year, annual U.S. sales of small crossovers quadrupled, from just over 405,000 to well above 1.6 million, according to LMC Automotive, an industry data and research firm. Only their larger cousins, midsize crossovers such as the Toyota Highlander and Ford Edge, grew faster. This year, sales of small crossovers have already passed last year's record total of 1,656,497.

John Felice, Ford Motor Co.'s U.S. marketing and sales chief, said buyers have been moving to the small crossovers from other vehicles, a trend that has accelerated in the past three months.

"Some of the source of that shift has come from the car side of the business," he said, after Ford reported a 17 percent decline in sales of its Focus small car.

Dealers and small-crossover owners say the vehicles are appealing for a number of reasons:

▶ They get better gas mileage than big cars or SUVs, and they're more maneuverable and easier to park. That appeals to downsizing baby boomers.

▶ They sit higher, giving drivers a better view than cars. They have more room for kids in the back seat than the compact cars they're based on.

▶ With a big hatch and cargo compartment behind the rear seat, there's room for dogs, golf clubs or bicycles.

▶ Crossovers are generally cheaper than truck-based SUVs or large cars, staring around $19,000, although options can jack up the price. A loaded CR-V can run north of $35,000.

"I just did not want to drive a big vehicle," says Carol Race, 66, of Winter Haven, Fla., who traded in a Mercury Grand Marquis large sedan for a smaller Ford Escape last summer.

"It's so nice to have that extra room in the garage," the elementary school secretary says.

Gas mileage also was important to Race. Her Escape gets 26 mpg in combined city-highway driving, while the Marquis got around 19.

Toyota started the segment with the RAV4 in 1995. The Japanese barely compete in the red-hot pickup market, so these vehicles complement their best-selling small and midsize cars.

Beekeeper Kellen Henry replaces her Feedback Farms hive in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn, in New York. There are issues beyond legality that potential beekeepers should consider. Beekeeping requires space, time and cooperation with the surrounding community.

To bee or not to bee?

Hobbyist hives require time, money

By KELLEN HENRY
Associated Press

NEW YORK — There's no shortage of buzz about beekeeping these days.

From environmentalists worried about disappearing colonies to foodies seeking locally sourced liquid gold, lots of new beekeepers are itching to roll down their sleeves.

With cities like New York lifting beekeeping bans, and with a wealth of new books, online videos and meet-up groups, learning the basics is easier than ever.

But as a hobbyist beekeeper myself, who once moved a hive full of bees from Washington, D.C., to New York during a career change, I can also tell you that the sweet rewards of homemade honey don't come without some sticky practical challenges.

One of those, of course, is facing the bees themselves.

"You can learn 99 percent of beekeeping on YouTube, but you need to know that when you're actually there and you're digging into a box filled with 50,000 stinging insects, that you're good with that," said Chase Emmons, managing partner and apiary director at Brooklyn Grange, a rooftop farm in New York that offers some hands-on training at its hives.

Whether you're creating a small business or just planning to enjoy your own honey, here are some realistic pointers on the money, space and neighborly grace required of a beekeeper.

Kellen Henry uses a smoker to calm the bees during a hive inspection.

Location, Location, Location

Where you keep your bees is an important part of how to keep them. A sunny, out-of-the-way spot with good drainage is best. Scope out a location that won't trip up unsuspecting neighbors, curious pets or repairmen.

Your hive should also be convenient for frequent inspections. Remember you'll be carrying equipment and removing heavy boxes of honey at harvest time. If you have to scale a rickety roof ladder to see your bees, you might be tempted to neglect your duties.

If you have a landlord, make sure he or she is on board, and make sure beekeeping is legal in your city. Then take some time to sell the idea to your neighbors. Emmons recommends coming armed with a few jars of honey to sweeten the deal.

"The last thing you need is unhappy neighbors," he said. "You can catch more flies with honey."

Not just a walk in the park

The good news is you don't have to hire a bee sitter when you leave town on vacation. Once the hive is up and running, the bees are quite self-sufficient in their daily needs. But preventing pests and swarms, as well as extracting honey, will require some time and even some hard, physical work over the course of the year.

A deep hive chamber full of honey can weigh as much as 90 pounds, and actively managing your hive will require lifting and maneuvering those bulky boxes. You'll also be suiting up in heavy clothing and working in the hot sun.

As a new beekeeper, you should make time to attend a class or meet-up group on top of your bee yard work. You might even meet a potential partner to help you shoulder the load.

Honey money

Before you take gold out of your hive, you'll have to put some in. It might cost you around $400 to get set with wooden hive equipment, tools and the bees themselves, though much of your equipment can be used for several years before being replaced.

Shop around before ordering, and appraise deluxe, all-in-one kits carefully. They may be easier than buying equipment a la carte but they often include supplies you don't really need. If you're handy, you'll also find ample specs online for building some of your own equipment.

When it comes to purchasing, there's strength in numbers. Joining a bee group is a good way to get in on cheaper bulk orders or shipping discounts, swap used equipment and pass the hat on big purchases, like pricey honey extracting equipment.

Scratching the itch

Using good practices and inspecting the hive at appropriate times can go a long way toward minimizing stings. But they will happen from time to time.

Assuming you don't have a severe allergy to apitoxin, the venom in honey-bee stings, the worst you'll have to endure is some local pain, itching and swelling that's treatable with over-the-counter medicine.

If you're afraid of bee stings, remember it's OK to go heavy on the protective clothing if it encourages you to visit the hive, especially while you're getting used to handling the bees. Don't let beekeeper machismo intimidate you into doing hive inspections in a T-shirt if it makes you nervous.

In general, be flexible to trying a different approach if yours isn't working.

"When you have 10 beekeepers in a room, you're going to have 12 opinions. Humans have been doing it for 10,000 years and there are really strong opinions," Emmons said. "Go with what you're comfortable with."

Put your kitchen sink to work with these accessories

Ed Del Grande
Ask the Plumber

Dear Ed: We need a few ideas. We're replacing our counters and plan to install stone countertops with an under-mount-style sink. What current trends do you recommend we include with our new kitchen sink? – Mary, Idaho

A: Choosing a quality faucet is key. However, most kitchen faucets can easily be replaced down the road. Under-mount-style sinks can be another story.

Since the counter locks the sink in place, the kitchen sink you choose may stay in place for a very long time. So I recommend following the new trend of installing a new kitchen sink with built-in accessories.

1. Bottom sink racks – These are drain racks that sit on the bottom of the sink bowls. They also protect sink bottoms to help your sink look new even after years of use.

2. Custom cutting boards – Specially designed to fit your sink profile, custom cutting surfaces allow you to prepare foods and easily sweep the scraps right into your disposer.

3. Saddle racks – Fairly new on the market, a saddle rack hangs over a sink divider wall. This allows one to turn that wasted space into a towel rack and/or a handy sponge holder.

Dear Ed: I recently went to purchase a new toilet to replace my old one. But I found so many styles that I was not sure what I needed. Can you please help me with basic toilet bowl choices? – Jim, Rhode Island

A: Your existing toilet can act as a template to help narrow down your choices. So, here are five basic tips to help you create a checklist to follow when buying a new toilet to closely match your present toilet.

1. Color choice. Using up-to-date color samples, match up your existing toilet with the closest color available.

2. One- or two-piece toilet: If your toilet tank is a separate component and bolted to your bowl, that is a two-piece toilet. A one-piece toilet is manufactured as one complete plumbing fixture.

3. Standard or comfort height: If you would like toilet bowl that's a little higher, order "comfort height."

4. Round or elongated bowl: Looking down, round bowls are shaped like a circle, while elongated bowls are more egg-shaped.

5. Bring a photo of your old toilet: It can help sales associates answer these questions.

Things all gardeners should know

Joe Lamp'l
The Gardener Within

I've been gardening nearly all my life. One of the things I find most interesting about it is that I learn something new almost every day. And yet there are a number of things we should all know to be better and smarter gardeners. Here are four to start with.

Use more mulch

If there were ever a workhorse for the garden, it's mulch.

A 3-inch (or so) layer over the soil surface does so many good things for the health of your plants and soil. The aesthetic value of mulch is enough of a reason to use it. It's like the icing on a cake to provide a polished, finished look to any bed.

More importantly, it provides tremendous benefits overall.

Mulch suppresses weed growth by blocking sunlight needed for many weed seeds to germinate. It holds vital moisture in the ground, reducing irrigation needs. Mulch helps cut down on certain soil-borne diseases from harming plants because the mulch provides a protective barrier between certain diseases and foliage. It also insulates soil temperature by keeping the ground and roots cooler on hot days and warmer on cold days. Any natural mulch will work.

And consider free sources, too. Arborists' wood chips or shredded leaves are two of my favorite sources.

Drainage in containers

How many times have you been told to add something to the bottom of a container to improve drainage? Examples include small stones, packing peanuts, crushed cans and marbles.

But the fact is, adding anything to a container first doesn't help at all. The reason is that water doesn't move readily from one substrate to another of unequal pore sizes. It tends to stay or hold much of its original volume in the soil layer. By adding something to the bottom of the container, we are effectively raising the level of where water remains. The consequence is damp or potentially saturated soil closer to the surface and surrounding your roots. That can lead to rotting roots and dead plants. Better to simply fill the container with all soil.

Plant at the right level

Even printed plant tags tell you to transfer a containerized plant or tree into the ground at the same level that it was growing in the container. That is not always correct, and a bad assumption to make. It's one of the most common causes of premature plant death.

The only correct way to plant something is to know where the tops of the roots are and plant it at that level. It is very common that, even in a container, the roots have been covered up over time at the nursery with several inches of additional soil. At planting time, pull back the top layer of soil until you get to the roots. Then plant at that level in the ground. It's better to plant slightly high than too low.

Improve pot-bound plants with a box cut

When it comes to pot-bound trees and shrubs, the typical treatment – if we did anything at all – was to slice through the tightly bound root mass. We assumed that by breaking the pattern, we'd enable the roots to all start growing out instead. It turns out that method is far less effective than previously thought.

The best method for dealing with such conditions is called the box cut. It involves slicing or sawing off a narrow section of the bottom of the root mass, as well as slicing off vertical sections of the root mass all the way around as well.

The result looks like a squared-off root ball. The benefit is a plant or tree that will establish a much healthier and fuller root system.

Garey does great job balancing SJ's concerns

Editor,

Please join us in electing St. Joseph City Commissioner Mike Garey to another term.

His proven dedication to local government and our community has been demonstrated in several ways. As a lifelong area resident, he appreciates the dynamic of maintaining the charm of St Joseph's small, hometown atmosphere, yet understands the importance of tourism to generate revenue for local merchants. His vote against short-term rentals reflected his consideration of local residents and their concerns. Mike is a guy who listens, weighs the facts and takes his role of commissioner seriously. Vote for Mike on Tuesday.

Barfield would bring fine qualities to Commission

Editor,

The citizens of St. Joseph are fortunate that their choices on Tuesday's City Commission ballot are all candidates with excellent qualifications. With this letter I would like to express my support for candidate George Barfield.

I'd like to urge readers to visit www.georgebarfield.com online and read about this remarkable gentleman. Among his accomplishments are eight years in the Navy and four years in the Marine Corp., 32 years as an educator, and currently a Lead Deacon at his church. George and I have been friends for more than 25 years. I know his experience and commitment to service will bring a great deal of leadership to the City Commission.

A terrible FDA decision on powerful new painkiller

The United States consumes 99 percent of the hydrocodone used in the world. Opioids are over-prescribed and frequently abused. Overdoses from narcotic painkillers have quadrupled in the last decade.

This epidemic of abuse and addiction is why we think the U.S. Food and Drug Administration made a good decision last week to recommend tighter controls on narcotic painkillers such as Vicodin.

It's also why we cannot fathom an FDA decision announced the very next day to approve a new high-dose narcotic painkiller without a formula to limit abuse and using a testing method that critics say biases the test in favor of approval.

Zohydro ER was approved even after the FDA's own advisers recommended against it. It will be the first hydrocodone-only opioid and will be available in doses containing as much as five to 10 times more of the narcotic than other hydrocodone products on the market such as Vicodin, which also contains acetaminophen.

The narcotic in Zohydro ER is designed to be released over 12 hours, but it's easy to see how it might be abused by people who could crush it, chew it or mix it with alcohol to get high.

"If the FDA was really interested in protecting the public, they would have said, 'No thanks ... we have too many people dying of opioids in this country to justify approving Zohydro,'" David Juurlink, a physician and director of pharmacology and toxicology at the University of Toronto, told John Fauber of the Journal Sentinel and Kristina Fiore of MedPage Today, who collaborated on an article about the FDA decision.

"Minus the pesky acetaminophen, plus the crushability, it's a disaster in the making."

We fear that Juurlink might be right – and so did FDA staff. Fauber and Fiore reported that a November 2012 memo from FDA staff predicted that the drug would be abused more than traditional hydrocodone products. The new drug will come in doses as high as 50 mg.

It was approved using a method known as "enriched enrollment," in which, as Fauber and Fiore describe, drug companies are allowed to weed out people who either don't respond well to a drug or can't tolerate it before the actual clinical trial begins. Such a testing method is cheaper and makes it more likely that a drug will be found effective and potentially be approved by the FDA. Some experts think such a testing method is bogus, a poor substitute for more rigorous testing and, especially, for the real world.

Fauber reported in October that for years, FDA officials and drug company executives have gotten together for annual private meetings at expensive hotels through an organization funded by the companies. Whether this coziness influences the agency's decisions is hard to say, but it certainly calls into question FDA credibility.

What isn't in doubt is that the FDA went all in on Zohydro. The agency said the drug gives physicians another option for patients who need an extended-release drug and for those who have become opioid-tolerant. And there certainly may be many benefits for a drug such as Zohydro if prescribed appropriately. But we think that FDA got this risk equation backwards, especially since an abuse-deterrent formulation of the drug likely won't be available for months. From 1999 to 2010, the number of people who died after overdosing on narcotic painkillers rose from about 4,000 to about 16,000, Fauber and Fiore reported.

As Judith Kramer, a professor of medicine at Duke University, said during a hearing of FDA advisers last December, "With treatment of chronic pain, are we really, in the long run, helping people, or are we creating an epidemic? This drug will almost certainly cause dependence in the people that are intended to take it."

That should have given FDA pause. That it didn't is worrisome.

Abigail Adams was America's first feminist

Bruce Kauffmann
History Lesson

Had there been a National Organization for Women in America in the late 18th century, Abigail Adams, the wife of our second president, John Adams, would have been a charter member. The woman who once admonished her husband to "remember the ladies" when considering legislation in the Continental Congress, was a firm believer in women's rights, and she lived a life that proved it.

It was a life defined by the American Revolution, which, because its demands on her husband kept him away from home so often, only strengthened her independence, self sufficiency and confidence that she was the equal of any man. It was Abigail who ran the family farm while John was in Congress or representing America abroad. That meant she was up before dawn, starting the fire, feeding the livestock, cooking the family meals and – because the war had shut down the schools – home-schooling their children.

It was Abigail who also managed the family finances, and probably did a better job than John would have done. Ignoring his advice to invest in land, for example, she bought public securities that eventually turned a fair profit. Yes, the times being what they were, a man (her uncle) had to execute those financial transactions, but it was Abigail who made the decisions – and kept a share of the profits.

It was Abigail who also saw first-hand America at war, and did what she could to support it. In her native Massachusetts the fighting was pervasive, with American soldiers regularly afoot, and she often invited them into her home to rest and take a light meal. She even made musket balls for American rifles by melting pewter spoons in her fireplace.

And then, late at night, her work done, she would sit down and write her husband one of her many letters – the correspondence between John and Abigail was voluminous and touched on a wide range of subjects. Abigail was a political junkie, constantly craving news of Congress's activities and freely giving John political advice. And in her letters to John she also regularly complained about the lack of women's rights, including a woman's inability to hold political office (a complaint that, back then, must have astonished John!).

In sum, she considered herself John's equal partner, as proven by the fact that, years before she died, which she did this week in 1818, she wrote a will and testament, even though, technically speaking, she had nothing to bequeath because in those days all property in a marriage was legally the husband's.

Abigail didn't care, and it was hardly a surprise that most all of her bequests in that will went to the women in her family.

Medical marijuana laws have not lived up to the dire predictions

In 1996, as California voters considered whether to make theirs the first state to legalize the use of marijuana for medical purposes, they were warned that they were on the verge of creating a grim wasteland from which they might never escape.

Steve Chapman

Brad Gates, sheriff of Orange County and head of a group opposing the ballot measure, called it an "irresponsible" change that would unleash uncontrollable drug use and produce a "nightmare for law enforcement." President Bill Clinton opposed it, and his drug czar called it a "cruel hoax." But the measure won anyway.

That was 17 years ago, and today, it's clear that the critics were under the influence of some hallucinogenic substance. As a way of destroying the California way of life, Proposition 215 has been a bust.

In one respect, the opponents were right: The program is so lenient that getting medical marijuana is easy for anyone claiming a medical need, from chronic pain to insomnia to anxiety. A CNN reporter said it took him 20 minutes to get the required card and recommendation from a doctor, with no physical exam. Some physicians advertise their willingness to certify patients for cannabis.

So the effect is pretty close to legalizing pot for all adults who want it. But the apparent consequences of this outwardly drastic change amount to a nonevent.

As The New York Times reported Sunday, "Warnings voiced against partial legalization – of civic disorder, increased lawlessness and a drastic rise in other drug use – have proved unfounded." By now, there's a stack of research indicating that allowing therapeutic use of cannabis has had no notable ill effects.

One fear was that the law would encourage kids to smoke weed by suggesting it's not dangerous. But a study of California and other states by D. Mark Anderson of Montana State University, Benjamin Hansen of the University of Oregon and Daniel Rees of the University of Colorado Denver reached the conclusion that "the legalization of medical marijuana was not accompanied by increases in the use of marijuana or other substances such as alcohol and cocaine among high school students. Interestingly, several of our estimates suggest that marijuana use actually declined."

Another risk was that the state would be overrun with stoned motorists weaving randomly down the highways, wreaking death and destruction. But the same scholars, in a separate investigation of medical marijuana states, detected just the opposite effect: a reduction in overall traffic fatalities of at least 8 percent in the first year.

They suspect that some people switch from alcohol to cannabis – and that pot smokers are either less likely to drive while impaired or, if they do drive, are less likely to crash.

The epidemic of crime that cops expected failed to materialize. The state's crime rate has fallen by nearly 40 percent since 1996, and violent crime has been cut in half. Crime fell nationally as well, but not quite as much as in California. The same pattern holds even if you look solely at the period after 2004, when dispensaries became common.

None of this has changed the tune of those who were against it all along. In 2009, the California Police Chiefs Association put out a report repeating the litany of horrors, including the allegation that "minors who are exposed to marijuana at dispensaries or residences where marijuana plants are grown may be subtly influenced to regard it as a generally legal drug, and inclined to sample it." Or they may not.

The group says that "many violent crimes have been committed that can be traced to the proliferation of marijuana dispensaries" and that "criminals in search of prey" are "commonly encountered outside" them. Yet somehow the Golden State has gotten dramatically safer.

Some areas have more such shops and the resulting traffic than neighbors prefer, which also happens with liquor stores and convenience stores. But even alongside the dens of iniquity, trouble is not the norm. A study by UCLA professors Nancy Kepple and Bridget Freisthler found no evidence that marijuana outlets generate crime in the surrounding areas.

All this news is a good omen for states that are considering legalization of recreational use of cannabis, something Colorado and Washington embraced last year. It's also reassuring for residents of Illinois, which will allow medical use starting Jan. 1. But if you're expecting a more liberal policy to be a big deal, you're in for a letdown.

Stop-frisk depends on new NYC mayor

By JONATHAN LEMIRE and COLLEEN LONG
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Front-running mayoral candidate Bill de Blasio faces political and legal dilemmas now that a judge's ruling critical of the police department's stop-and-frisk tactic has been blocked.

The federal judge's summertime rebuke of the department's stop-and-frisk policy as discriminatory to blacks and Hispanics was a ringing affirmation of one of de Blasio's major campaign themes, helping propel him from also-ran to Democratic nominee nearly 40 points ahead in the polls days before the election.

But on Thursday a federal appeals court temporarily blocked the ruling and took the extraordinary step of booting the judge off the case for "running afoul" of the judicial code of conduct.

The decision arms Republican nominee Joe Lhota with a new line of attack as he insists that a de Blasio victory would handcuff law enforcement and return the city to its crime-filled past. Lhota, a deputy in former Mayor Rudy Giuliani's administration, has been a staunch defender of stop-and-frisk, and on Friday he released an online video saying "the entire premise of the de Blasio campaign collapsed" with the appeals court decision.

It's unclear how the federal case will proceed if de Blasio, the city's public advocate, wins Tuesday's election.

Previously, de Blasio said he would drop the city's appeal of U.S. District Court Judge Shira Scheindlin ruling, which ordered a broad set of reforms to the police department's use of the tactic for stopping, questioning and sometimes frisking people. But he could choose to settle with those urging the reforms, eliminating federal oversight and allowing him to manage the police department as he sees fit.

He reiterated Friday that he wasn't going to pursue the appeal but added: "We don't know what the next steps are in the legal process."

During the past decade, there have been nearly 5 million stops, mostly of minority men. Only about 10 percent of the stops result in arrests or summonses, and weapons were found about 2 percent of the time.

Scheindlin presided over a lengthy bench trial in which black and Hispanic men testified that they had been improperly stopped because of their races, and she appointed a federal monitor to oversee changes to training and supervision.

Police Commissioner Raymond Kelly said Friday that the department would continue to look into one suggestion ordered by Scheindlin: the possibility of officers using body-worn cameras. But he said the department already does sophisticated stop-and-frisk training that's unparalleled in the country and many of the reforms were unnecessary.

"In my judgment, the quantum of evidence certainly was just not there to make this sweeping indictment of the entire police department on something called indirect racial profiling," Kelly said. "We don't racially profile. It's against our regulations. It's against the law."

Gunman kills TSA agent at LAX, wounds 3 others

By TAMI ABDOLLAH and JUSTIN PRITCHARD
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — A man carrying a note that said he wanted to "kill TSA" pulled a semi-automatic rifle from a bag and shot his way past a security checkpoint at Los Angeles International Airport on Friday, cutting down one Transportation Security Administration officer and wounding at least three others, authorities said.

The gunman was wounded in a shootout with police and taken into custody, authorities said.

The attack at the nation's third-busiest airport sent terrified travelers running for cover and disrupted flights from coast to coast.

The slain employee was the first TSA officer killed in the line of duty in the 12-year history of the agency, which was founded in the aftermath of 9/11.

Two law enforcement officials, speaking on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the investigation publicly, identified the gunman as Paul Ciancia, 23, of Pennsville, N.J. He had apparently been living in Los Angeles.

He was wearing fatigues and carrying a bag containing a handwritten note that said he wanted to kill TSA employees and "pigs," according to one of the officials, who was briefed at LAX on the investigation.

Pennsville Police Chief Allen Cummings said Ciancia's father, the owner of an auto body shop, had called Cummings early Friday afternoon saying another of his children had received a text message from Paul "in reference to him taking his own life." Cummings said the elder Ciancia asked for help in locating his son.

The chief said he called Los Angeles police, which sent a patrol car to Ciancia's apartment. There, two roommates said that they had seen him Thursday and that he was fine, according to Cummings.

Cummings said that the Ciancias are a "good family" and that his department had had no dealings with the son.

Shots were fired Friday at Los Angeles International Airport, prompting authorities to evacuate a terminal and stop flights headed for the city from taking off from other airports.

The attack began around 9:20 a.m. when the gunman pulled an assault-style rifle from a bag and began firing inside Terminal 3, Los Angeles Airport Police Chief Patrick Gannon said. The terminal serves such airlines as Virgin America, AirTran, Alaska Airlines, Horizon Air and JetBlue.

The gunman then went to the security screening area, where he fired more shots and went into the secure area of the terminal, Gannon said. Officers exchanged fire with him and seized him, Gannon said.

As gunshots rang out, panicked travelers dropped to the ground. Those who had made it past security ran out of the terminal and onto the tarmac or sought cover inside restaurants and lounges.

"We just hit the deck. Everybody in the line hit the floor and shots just continued," said Xavier Savant, who was waiting in the security line where the shooting took place. He described it as a "Bam! Bam! Bam!" burst of gunfire.

Robinson issued the statement this morning. He said the police department and the state fire marshal's office are continuing their investigation into the fire, which also forced the evacuation of several hundred residents living near the plant.

Officials: U.S. drone kills Pakistani Taliban leader

Associated Press

Pakistani Taliban chief Hakimullah Mehsud (left) is seen with his comrade Waliur Rehman (front center) during his meeting with media in Sararogha of Pakistani tribal area of South Waziristan along the Afghanistan border on Oct. 4, 2009. Intelligence officials said Friday that Mehsud was one of three people killed in a U.S. drone strike

PESHAWAR, Pakista — A U.S. drone strike Friday killed Hakimullah Mehsud, the leader of the Pakistani Taliban, in a major blow to the group that came after the government said it had started peace talks with the insurgents, according to intelligence officials and militant commanders.

Mehsud, who was on U.S. most-wanted terrorist lists with a $5 million bounty, is believed to have been behind a deadly suicide attack at a CIA base in Afghanistan, a failed car bombing in New York's Times Square and other brazen assaults in Pakistan that killed thousands of civilians and security forces.

The ruthless, 34-year-old commander who was closely allied with al-Qaida was widely reported to have been killed in 2010 — only to resurface later.

But a senior U.S. intelligence official said Friday the U.S. received positive confirmation that Mehsud had been killed. Two Pakistani intelligence officials also confirmed his death, as did two Taliban commanders who saw his mangled body after the strike. A third commander said the Taliban would likely choose Mehsud's successor on Saturday.

"If true, the death of Hakimullah Mehsud will be a significant blow to the Pakistani Taliban (TTP), an organization that poses a serious threat to the Pakistani people and to Americans in Pakistan," said Michael Morell, a former acting CIA director who retired in August and has championed the drone program. His comments came in a statement emailed to The Associated Press.

There is increased tension between Islamabad and Washington over the drone attacks, and Pakistan is also trying to strike a peace deal with the Taliban.

The group's deputy leader was killed in a drone strike in May, and one of Mehsud's top deputies was arrested in Afghanistan last month.

The intelligence officials and militant commanders said Friday's drone attack that killed Mehsud hit a compound in the village of Dande Derpa Khel in the North Waziristan tribal area. Four other suspected militants were killed, they said, including Mehsud's cousin, uncle and one of his guards. They did not have the identity of the fourth victim.

At least four missiles struck just after a vehicle in which Mehsud was riding had entered the compound, the Taliban commanders said, adding that a senior group of militants was discussing the peace talks at a nearby mosque shortly before the attack.

All the officials and the militant commanders spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to talk to the media.

The CIA and the White House declined to comment.

Pakistan's tribal region is dangerous to visit, making it difficult for journalists to independently confirm information on drone attacks there. The Pakistani government was swift to condemn the drone strike, although that comment came before news of Mehsud's death was reported.

"These strikes are a violation of Pakistan's sovereignty and territorial integrity. There is an across the board consensus in Pakistan that these drone strikes must end," the Ministry of Foreign Affairs said.

CHARLOTTE

Guetschow said the city has estimated that Charlotte's daytime population is 180 percent of its nighttime population.

Charlotte is the county seat of Eaton County and has several larger employers, including Spartan Motors, which employs about 600 workers.

He said the City Council wanted to dedicate money raised through a city income tax to road improvement, but state statute doesn't allow that.

So, on Tuesday Charlotte voters will also consider a charter amendment, which states that in any year the city income tax is levied, the equivalent of 2.34 mills of property taxes will be used for street repair and construction.

City Manager Guetschow said the City Council could have designated that city income tax revenue be used for roads through a resolution, but that could have been overturned by future councils. With a charter amendment, he said the City Council would need voter approval to alter it.

He said a city income tax of 1 percent on businesses and residents and 0.5 percent on nonresidents who work in the city is expected to raise between $1.1 million and $1.5 million annually.

The 2.34 mills of property taxes are expected to raise about $500,000, which is the amount the City Council wants to spend annually on street repairs. If the city income tax proposal is passed, he said the City Council has adopted a policy that any money raised and not used on streets will be refunded by either reducing property taxes or the income tax.

"We've been talking about the need for additional funding for streets for a long time here," he said. "The city of Charlotte has never had a strong ongoing program for street improvement. And like many Michigan municipalities, we've suffered a loss of revenue sharing here that has further eroded our ability to invest in those critical infrastructure items."

About a year ago, the City Council appointed a citizens committee to explore options for raising money for streets.

"They ultimately came back with a recommendation for a dedicated millage," he said.

But Guetschow said the council decided to pursue the income tax option first.

He said the city did its own revenue study rather than spend the estimated $20,000 to have an outside company do it.

"We put together a model to predict how much revenue it would generate based on the experiences of comparable cities that already have an income tax."

He said there is an organization that opposes the city income tax, but neither the supporters or opponents are spending much money on campaigning.

"The proponents have decided to let the facts speak for themselves," Guetschow said. "And, based on what I've seen, I think the efforts on the part of the opposition group are similarly lightly funded."

He said he does not believe the city income tax proposal will pass Tuesday.

"Nobody wants to pay more in taxes, even though they agree there is a need to repair streets."

DUNE SHIFTING

Geologist suggests installing fences or planting vegetation

large dune with a blowout with other small dunes.

A blowout is a large, eroded portion of a dune where vegetation used to exist. "But something disturbed the vegetation," Van Dijk said. The vegetation holds the sand in place, but when it's gone the wind can erode the dune, sometimes resulting in a dished area. There are places where wind has piled sand that had come from elsewhere.

What to call it?

The dune area, which measures 7.4 acres, doesn't appear to have a formal name. It is often referred to as the Syndicate Park Subdivision Dune, though much of it is in the North Point Land Preserve.

One of the report's suggestions is that the county post signs at access points to educate people on the effect they may have on vegetation.

The other major point is to reduce the number of trails to two main trails or possibly four. Right now there are two main ATV trails and about 30 unmanaged trails.

Cultra said the idea is for one trail going from Syndicate Park on the north over the dune to the beach. This trail could be used by ATVs.

He said the other would be a foot trail through the entire dune area.

Although ATVs are harder on the dune than pedestrians, Van Dijk said that a survey of local residents showed they favor ATV access.

The report also proposed some ways to deal with the blowout.

"They could put in sand fences," Van Dijk said. "They could plant vegetation."

Up to VB County

The ball is now in the county's court.

"There are a lot of things that Van Buren County needs to figure out before they put a plan in place," geology professor Van Dijk said.

The sand and the dunes are remnants of a glacial period, and they make unusual ecosystems.

"In sand dunes, in very short distances you can be in a completely different ecological zone," Van Dijk said. Certain plants, such as sand-loving plants near the beach, are found only in certain areas.

Back in January county commissioners heard another report about the dune and its effect on Syndicate Park. That report also recommended stabilization.

The county owns 87 of the 260 parcels in the subdivision, largely due to the owners defaulting on their taxes.

Syndicate Park started in 1910.

The lots, which are 20 feet by 100 feet, were given away with subscriptions to the Chicago Tribune. Many of the homeowners in the plat have more than one lot.

Syndicate Park borders the 17-acre North Point Land Preserve on the north. The county-owned North Point borders the Van Buren State Park on the state park's north boundary.

Turak sets school rushing record as St. Joseph shuts out Sturgis

St. Joseph's AJ Montoya throws a pass as Sturgis' Luke Summey rushes in during Friday's game.

St. Joseph 16 Sturgis 0

ST. JOSEPH — St. Joseph football coach Gandalf Church aptly summed up the performance of running back Jack Turak in one word — "phenomenal."

Turak rushed for a school-record 391 yards on 43 carries, including touchdown runs of 5 and 12 yards, in leading the eighth-rated Bears to a 16-0 victory over Sturgis at Dickinson Stadium in a Division 3 playoff opener.

"Any time anyone rushes for that many yards it's due to the play of his offensive line," said Turak. "And, ours played just great tonight, especially on the weak side."

St. Joseph (9-1) advances to face rival Lakeshore (7-3) next Friday night for the district title.

"I thought our lines on both sides of the ball were tremendous," Church said. "With the rainy, misty weather we wanted to run the ball and put pressure on Chance Stewart."

Stewart, Sturgis' 6-foot-6 senior, who has given a verbal commitment to Western Michigan University, was a mere 4-of-25 passing for just 59 yards. Two of his throws were picked off by Domoneke Mitchell and Turak.

"It's tough to throw the football in this type of weather, but the way we were pressuring and covering his receivers, I don't think he would have had a great night if the weather was fine," noted Church.

The Bears were again without their other top running back Justin Gambrell, who is still nursing a high ankle sprain.

Starting quarterback AJ Montoya re-aggravated his sore ankle late in the first quarter and never returned. Concerning the duo's availability for the rematch with Lakeshore, Church said: "We'll have to wait and see."

In Montoya's absence, placekicker and backup quarterback Cullen Hoffman took over, with the Bears leading 3-0 thanks to his 35-yard field goal.

But the Bears offensive line and Turak made Hoffman's relief appearance somewhat easy as St. Joseph rang up 20 first downs. That included 18 on the ground and two by penalty; the Bears held a 12:03 time of possession differential.

Turak's two TD runs came in the second and fourth periods.

Hoffman's punts also played a big part in keeping the Trojans at bay. He had four punts for nearly a 50-yard average, including two that were downed on Sturgis' own 8-yard line.

Turak had no complaints about the field conditions despite the rain.

Defense dominates for Watervliet

No. 10 Panthers hold Indians to 80 yards of offense

Watervliet 44 Hartford 0

WATERVLIET — As well as Watervliet played offensively in Friday's 44-0 Division 6 district playoff win over rival Hartford, the Panthers were even better on defense.

No. 10 Watervliet held Hartford to just 80 yards of offense on its way to the easy victory. The Panthers will host Schoolcraft next weekend for the district championship.

"Defensively we just were all over it tonight," Watervliet coach Jeremy Andrews said. "I'm really, really happy about the defensive effort. We play defense like that, we'll be able to win some more games.

"They're a good football team, and to shut them out, I'm very happy about that."

Watervliet (10-0) defeated Hartford (6-4) during the regular season 41-17 on its way the Southwestern Athletic Conference South Division championship.

"It's great," Watervliet's Deven Schultz said. "The biggest rival we have, beating them twice feels so awesome."

Schultz had a big impact on both sides of the ball for the Panthers. He had six receptions for 175 yards and three touchdowns, and made several big hits on defense, including one that broke up a pass that would've gone for a first

First half carries Decatur past Bridgman

Decatur 28 Bridgman 14

DECATUR — Decatur's big first half was enough.

The Raiders found the endzone on their first three possessions and held off Bridgman 28-14 in a Division 7 district opener on Friday.

The victory for Decatur (7-3) sets up a meeting with Cassopolis next Friday for the district title.

Junior quarterback Matthew Botti was efficient once again for the Raiders, completing 7 of 10 passes for 159 yards and a touchdown.

Junior running back Johnathan Grosvenor ran for 97 yards and a touchdown to lead a punishing Raider backfield.

"We certainly came out ready to play and had some impressive drives to start the game," said Decatur coach Joe Groh. "After that, we fell asleep and because we couldn't take advantage of the chances we had to put the game away, it almost cost us."

It seemed like a rout was in the making after the first 13 minutes.

A 65-yard opening drive, capped off by a 10-yard touchdown run by Grosvenor, gave the Raiders a 6-0 lead early in the first quarter.

After a defensive stop on fourth down gave the offense the ball, senior running back Dakotah Haas punched in a 3-yard touchdown run.

Botti's pass to Hunter Bell for the two-point conversion gave the Raiders a 14-0 lead.

On the very next possession, a 60-yard Botti punt return put the Raider offense in business once again.

Clapp, defense come up big for Lancers

Turnovers help Lakeshore move past Coldwater

By AUSTIN BORNHEIM
HP Sports Writer

Lakeshore 28 Coldwater 21

STEVENSVILLE — The Lakeshore defense surrendered more than 300 yards Friday, but came up with turnovers when it needed them most.

None were bigger than Dustin Clapp's game-saving interception with 47 seconds left.

With Coldwater driving for the game-tying score, Clapp cut underneath Cardinals quarterback Luke Beckhusen's pass to secure the Lancers' 28-21 win in a Division 3 district playoff game.

Lakeshore (7-3) will play at St. Joseph for the district championship next Friday.

"I took a risk dropping back there, and I probably shouldn't have been there," Clapp said. "He was staring the receiver down the whole time, and it worked out."

The senior's first interception set up a Mike Adams 2-yard touchdown midway through the second quarter.

An off-target Beckhusen pass went right to Clapp, who took the ball back inside the Cardinals 30.

"Man, I was surprised that the ball came pretty much right at me," Clapp said. "I just said 'thank you, thank you' and made the play."

"He (Clapp) was big tonight," Lakeshore coach Denny Dock said. "Made some really big plays for us."

Lakeshore fumbled three times in its first two possessions, losing two of them, but the Lancers' defense came up with stops each time.

"We were shaky early on fumbling it a couple of times when we got in there tight with some chances to score," Dock said. "But we got it together and Mike (Adams) had a good game, our backfield played well and did what we needed to do.

"This time of year it's about just advancing to the next line of the bracket and we did that."

The two teams traded touchdowns early in the fourth quarter to put the score at 28-14 with nine minutes left to play.

Coldwater cut its deficit to seven on a six play, 66-yard drive that was capped by a Lucas Stempien 2-yard run.

The Cardinals forced a Lakeshore three-and-out on the Lancers' ensuing drive to get the ball back on their own 20 with 3:43 left in the game.

Coldwater (5-5) had reached the Lakeshore 30-yard line before the Clapp interception.

"It was one of those games that came down to a couple of bounces and a couple of plays," Coldwater coach Jeff Schorfhaar said. "Our boys played a heck of a game, but came up on the wrong side."

A 21-yard Murphy touchdown gave the Cardinals an early lead, but the Lancers scored 14 points in the second quarter to take a touchdown lead into the locker room.

Murphy finished with 140 yards on 22 carries.

Lakeshore increased its lead with a 4-yard Adams run on the first drive of the second half.

"Getting that touchdown out of the half was big to sort of put some pressure on them and give our guys some air moving forward in the second half," Adams said.

down on a Hartford fake punt.

"He's such a good football player," Andrews said. "He's such a good outside linebacker. He's four years (on varsity) at that outside backer spot. He knows that position so well."

Schultz caught a 98-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Luke Traver in the third quarter, making the score 38-0 and starting the running clock mercy rule.

"They were in cover zero, no safeties," Schultz said. "It's an easy way to throw the ball."

Traver, who started at quarterback for Hartford last season before transferring to Watervliet, completed 11 of 15 passes for 226 yards and four touchdowns — three to Schultz and a 21-yarder to Michael Strunk. Traver also rushed for 45 yards.

"I give Luke credit," Andrews said. "When they were playing with no safety there, we were able to figure it out and find some open areas."

Hartford managed just one first down in the first half, but had a chance to get back in the game midway through the second quarter.

With Watervliet up 12-0, what appeared to be a dropped pass by Schultz was ruled a catch and a fumble, giving Hartford the ball near midfield.

The Indians couldn't take advantage as a fourth-and-one pass fell incomplete.

Watervliet responded by driving 58 yards in four plays, capped by a 16-yard touchdown from Traver to Schultz.

Hartford fumbled the ensuing kickoff, and Joey Wells returned it 15 yards for another score, pushing the margin to 26-0.

Watervliet running back Garrison Muth opened the scoring with a 54-yard touchdown run, and finished with 95 rushing yards on just six carries.

Tyler Schwerdt was in on two sacks for the Panthers, and Weston DeHaven also had a sack.

"DeHaven is almost unblockable in there," Andrews said.

The Panthers went for two on all their touchdowns for the second consecutive week, as Traver has been held out of his kicking duties due to an injury.

Casper Aviles led Hartford with 12 carries for 41 yards. The Indians completed just one pass, which went for a four-yard loss.

"(Watervliet) played well, and the better team won," Hartford coach Dave Janicki said. "We're proud of our kids. We got in the playoffs. There's a lot of people who don't get in the playoffs, and I think we've been there eight of the last nine years. We're proud of the kids, but it just didn't go well tonight."

Catholic can't stop Cass running game

Lakers fall in Div. 7 playoff opener

By AARON GREEN
HP Sports Writer

CASSOPOLIS — Lake Michigan Catholic could not stop the Cassopolis running attack in the first half.

The Rangers piled up 170 yards rushing in the first half and scored on their first four possessions as Cassopolis defeated the Lakers 30-7 in the opening round of the Division 7 playoffs.

The Rangers averaged almost five yards a carry in the first half, scoring more than enough points to earn the win.

"The first half was as good as we have played all year offensively," Cassopolis coach Dan Purlee said. "We took care of the ball on the sloppiest night of the year and did not have backs going the wrong way."

The Rangers (7-3) advance to host the district title game against Decatur next Friday.

The Raiders were 28-14 winners over Bridgman in their playoff opener.

"Decatur is an extremely balanced football team," Purlee said. "We know they are going to come in here ready to play and we will need to be ready as well."

Catholic (7-3) struggled offensively to move the ball with any consistency.

"We are not the type of offense that is going to score quickly," Catholic coach Steve Graziano said. "We need some turnovers and need to grind it out."

Catholic opened the game with two nice runs by quarterback Kyle Frazier, taking the ball down to the Ranger 20-yard line. But three straight negative plays put the Lakers in a fourth and long.

Cassopolis came up with the stop and took over on the Laker 28.

The Rangers went on an 11-play, 72-yard drive capped by Nick Murphy's 1-yard quarterback dive for a quick 6-0 lead.

Michael Koenig fumbled the ensuing kickoff for the Lakers and it was recovered by Cassopolis' Isaiah Crider at the Laker 26-yard line.

It took seven plays for the Rangers to find the end zone as Murphy again dove in from a yard out for a 14-0 lead.

Cassopolis got the ball back again after a Catholic punt and went 65 yards on 11 plays for a score.

Travis Edwards scampered in from 8 yards out to cap the drive and a 22-0 lead.

The Lakers finally found some success on offense.

After a good return, Catholic started on its own 40 and drove 60 yards in five plays.

Jerimiah McCoy had the big run to set up the Lakers, breaking free for 40 yards to set up Justin Salvano's 8-yard touchdown run as the Lakers pulled closer at 22-7.

With 2:30 left in the first half, Catholic tried an onside kick.

Danny Hernandez's kick did not travel 10 yards, and the Rangers took over on the Laker 46.

This time it took only two plays, as Marquise Curtis took a screen pass, made a Laker miss in the backfield, and sprinted 30 yards for a 30-7 Cassopolis halftime lead.

"We got smacked in the face pretty good in the first half," Graziano said. "I told my team that they had two choices, they could go back out and continue to get smacked in the face, or they could go out and play some football. I think we played much better in the second half."

The second half saw Catholic's defense play much stouter, holding the Rangers to just 36 total yards.

"They hurt us on the edge in the first half," Graziano said. "We adjusted and fixed it in the second half."

The Lakers' offense could not capitalize as it continued to sputter.

Brown led the Ranger rushing attack with 95 yards on 15 carries. Crider added 56 yards on eight carries and Edwards chipped in 52 yards on 20 carries.

Catholic was led by Salvano, who finished with 59 yards on 14 carries. Frazier also had 59 yards on eight carries and McCoy had two carries for 56 yards.

"This was my first year with the kids and to go from the single wing to what we are running now is huge," Graziano said. "They have worked so hard and did everything I asked this season."

▶ From page B1

Dale Mann's 1-yard touchdown run with 11:12 remaining in the second quarter capped off an impressive 13-minute stretch of play for Decatur.

Down 21-0, Bridgman (6-4) eventually battled back.

Freshman running back Julian Sheriff's 14-yard touchdown run at the outset of the final quarter gave the Bees a spark they had taken three quarters to find.

Senior Jake Pappa's 2-yard run five minutes later made it a one-possession game.

With just over three minutes remaining, the Bees had a chance to get the ball back in Decatur territory when the Raiders decided to go for it on 4th and 1 from their own 45 yard line.

After Grosvenor plowed through the Bees line for a first down, Matthew

Bright-light sneezing has unknown cause

Dear Doctor K: Often when I step outside from a dark room into the sunlight, I sneeze. Why does this happen?

Dear Reader: My colleague, Dr. Robert Shmerling, looked into this question once. I learned from him that there are many people like you, and even more who suddenly sneeze when they move suddenly from a warm environment to a cold one (or vice versa).

Dr. Anthony Komaroff

Why do we sneeze in the first place? It's a complex reflex we all are born with, as it protects our lungs. It begins with nerve endings in the soft membranes that line the nose. When something irritating enters the nose with the air we breathe in and lands on the membranes, the nerve endings react. These triggers send messages to the throat, chest and abdomen to contract to forcefully rid the nasal passage of its contents. The sneeze forcibly ejects nasal air back out of the body (and away from the lungs).

It's similar to vomiting when we've eaten something that the stomach really doesn't like. The irritating substance that came down through the mouth gets ejected right back out through the mouth.

If sneezing is supposed to protect the lungs, why would anyone sneeze when he or she steps into the sunlight? How does sunlight threaten the lungs? It doesn't. Something has gone wrong with the reflex: It is triggered for no good reason.

No one knows why some people sneeze at the sight of bright light. It's possible that bright light triggers the other nerves involved in sneezing. Maybe the light flooding into the eye, or squinting in reaction to bright light, causes a crossed signal of sorts, making the body think a sneeze is in order.

Another unknown is why the muscles of the face, including the eyelid muscles, are also involved in sneezing. Scientists think the eyes might shut during a sneeze to keep out flying particles. (Though the idea that you cannot keep your eyes open during a sneeze is a myth. If you tried hard enough, you could probably do it.)

Humans actually expel more material from our mouths when we sneeze than from our noses. That's why it's important to cover both your mouth and nose when sneezing.

Dr. Shmerling tells me that he once saw an Internet video of a woman sneezing every time she walked from the shadowy spot of a room into the bright light near a window. Apparently she was using this sensitivity to light – called "photic" sneezing – to audition for an allergy medication commercial. She found a profitable use for her "talent."

Photic sneezing is harmless and can actually be useful. Ever have that annoying "need-to-sneeze" feeling, but the sneeze just won't come? Look briefly at a light. Often that will encourage the sneeze.

If you really want to avoid sneezing next time you come out of a dark space, keep your sunglasses handy. One study found they could prevent the photic sneeze.

Young wife expecting first child faces adult decisions

Dear Abby: I am 19 and a new bride. My husband is in the Army. We're very happy, but I just found out that I'm pregnant – I'm not sure how far along yet – and I feel torn about what to do.

My husband wants a child very badly, but he did say he would support whatever decision I make. While I have no objection to having a child, I know my family will make me feel guilty if I do by saying they are disappointed, that I should have waited and that I'm "throwing my life away."

Abby, I am so confused. I don't know what to do. I want my family to support me and be there when I have our first child. – Pressured and Confused

Dear Pressured: Was your family disappointed and saying you were throwing your life away when you married your husband? If the answer is no, then why would they accuse you of doing so because you are pregnant?

You are an adult, albeit a young one, and a wife. The first thing you need to do is see a gynecologist and find out how far along you are. Your next step is for you and your husband to decide if you are emotionally and financially ready to be parents.

No one can decide this for you, but your family's possible "disappointment" should not enter into your decision. If they are not supportive, your in-laws might be.

Jeanne Phillips
Dear Abby

Dear Abby: Before my son met his fiancee of five years, "Shelby," he went with another girl, "Dana," for three years. During that time we became good friends with Dana's parents (the "Smiths"). After the breakup, we stayed in touch with the Smiths and go out occasionally.

Recently, Mrs. Smith invited us to her husband's retirement party. When we told our son we were going, he mentioned it to Shelby, who told us we were being disrespectful to her by continuing our relationship with the Smiths.

Shelby's position is that all ties to Dana and her family should have been severed when the boyfriend/girlfriend relationship ended. Our position is the Smiths became friends of ours before Shelby was in the picture, and we don't think we are being disrespectful to anyone by continuing our relationship with this couple. Are we wrong? – Jim in California

Dear Jim: Of course not. Your son's fiancee appears to have serious insecurities. I sincerely hope you won't allow her to control your lives and your relationships, because if you do, this is just the beginning of how she will try to control you – and your son. This is Shelby's problem. SHE will have to deal with it. Please do not make it yours.

Dear Abby: I have friends who exclude me or take off with other friends before I can get to where they are meeting. What can I do to get them to call me? Why am I their whipping post? – Friend-Challenged in Overland Park, Kan.

Dear Challenged: Friends don't treat friends the way you are being treated. There is nothing you can do to get them to behave differently. You are letting them do this because you're hoping that if you ignore their insensitivity and rudeness, they will accept you.

Please stop trying to cling to them. Join activities where you'll meet people with whom you REALLY have something in common. If you do, you will be much happier than you are today.

Dear Readers: Once again, here is my "timely" reminder that daylight saving time ends at 2 a.m. Sunday – so don't forget to turn your clocks back one hour before bedtime.

Bridge

In "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead," Tom Stoppard (my favorite playwright) pointed out: "Eternity's a terrible thought. I mean, where's it all going to end?"

In today's deal, the trump split is terrible and seems to end declarer's chance of making six hearts. But he can survive. West leads the spade queen. South wins with his ace and cashes the heart ace to get the bad news. How must declarer continue?

It is rare that an auction starting one of a major – two of a major ends in a slam. However, that South hand is very strong. When South rebid three clubs, North assumed this was a help-suit game-try and jumped to four hearts because he had a good club holding and a maximum – aces are wonderful. South then carefully employed Blackwood before bidding the small slam.

It seems as though South must lose two trump tricks. But if South can reach an ending with the king-jack of hearts and a loser, while West still has his last three trumps, West can be trapped.

To achieve this ending, South must ruff three diamonds in his hand and find West with exactly 3-4-4-2 distribution.

At trick three, declarer plays a diamond to dummy's ace. He continues with a diamond ruff in his hand, the club king, a club to dummy's ace, another diamond ruff, the spade king, a spade ruff on the board, and, at trick 10, the third diamond ruff.

When that passes off quietly, South leads his last club. West must ruff and play away from his queen-10 of hearts into South's king-jack. Beautiful!

The church of 2020

What is the church of 2020 going to look like? This was the challenging question that I was asked at a recent clergy gathering in Detroit by the Rev. Michael Piazza. The idea was to provoke us to start thinking about how church can look in the future. The church of today often looks more like the church of the 1950s or the 1970s than it does like the church of the new millennium.

Damien J. Lake
Insights

I would consider myself a young clergy member, a progressive thinker, who is motivated to see some things change. The world that I live in is a lot different from the one my parents grew up in. The world of today, the one that I am raising my children in, is filled with anxiety, questions and struggles. I see grandparents raising their grandchildren. I see youths that are getting into more trouble, drugs, crime and teen pregnancy. I hear young adults asking questions and seeking answers for difficulties they are experiencing in the world. People today are in need of good pastors, ones who are theologically relevant, and ones who don't claim to have all the answers.

The church of 2020 and beyond will have to continue to ask challenging questions. It will have to continue to walk alongside of others who are struggling to find answers. As a minister who will still be serving the church and the communities in 2020, I realize that I don't and never will have all the answers. My own calling to serve others is a theological one that comes from my understanding of Jesus and his own calling – to serve others. Some ministers and churches get caught up in trying to be all things to all people. They try to have an answer for everyone and yet struggle in their own lives and are unwilling to bear witness to those struggles in front of others.

Ministers of the church in 2020 need to be relevant and realistic in the needs of all people. We need to be real, not afraid to show others our tears. I have been moved to tears by the death of a member in my faith community and have not be afraid to show those tears to others. I am willing to confess that I don't have all the answers, nor will I ever. I recognize my willingness to fail. Yes, that's right – ministers need to be willing to fail, because when we fail we find out one more way of how not to do something. When we show others this side of us, it helps them see us as normal people, called by God to serve others.

To truly be the church of 2020, we will have to be willing to go places we have not gone before. We can't just work at the food pantry or homeless shelter, but rather we must sit down with the poor and the afflicted and listen. We must listen to those who know oppression and share in their struggle and grief. We must give of our time, our energy and our listening ear and provide that unconditional love that Jesus taught. The challenge in ministry lies within; first we must answer the call, second we must live into that call, and third we must lead by example. Our faith may be more than 2,000 years old, but I can assure you that our God is still speaking ... are you still listening?

Ultra-Orthodox singers defy stereotypes in Israel

By ISAAC SCHARF
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — For most Israelis, the common perception of the ultra-Orthodox Jewish minority is that of an insulated, segregated society devoted to studying ancient biblical texts and rejecting the ills of secular life.

But a pair of devout, soft-spoken brothers in skullcaps and sidecurls are now breaking down some stereotypes by emerging as the most unlikely of media darlings – reality rock stars.

Arie and Gil Gat are Israel's latest national sweethearts after dominating the audition stage of Israel's top-rated reality talent show, "Rising Star," drawing tens of thousands of votes and rave reviews from secular fans.

By day, the duo pray only with men in their synagogues. By night, women give them standing ovations for harmonic renditions of classic hits by The Eagles and Simon and Garfunkel.

"The power of music is above everything," said Arie Gat, 48, who lives in an ultra-Orthodox neighborhood of Beit Shemesh, near Jerusalem. "I'm not a man of lights, flashes and sparkles. I am ready to stand – I say that in the spiritual sense – with what I have, without external outfits. There is no need for that. And I believe that if it's good it will sell and if not then not."

Dan Balilty / AP

Ultra-Orthodox Jewish singers Arie Gat (right) and his brother Gil perform as they participate in an Israeli TV show in Neve Ilan, Jerusalem.

So far, they've been a hit. Appearing in traditional ultra-Orthodox garb, including long beards and long black overcoats, with a guitar hanging gently across their chests, they've swept the votes of the show's four judges while raking in more than 80 percent of the interactive fan votes for performing "Hotel California" and "The Sound of Silence."

"Think about how many people in the world of entrainment, started with a weird look and became the biggest stars," said Tzvika Hadar, one of the show's judges. "These are not people with agents, and a story, and someone who pushed them, and photographed them for a photo-book, and you know what, even caused some provocation. You are taking people from the periphery, from their lives, their surroundings, their beliefs and they come and sing."

Success on the show indicates wide support from an audience that includes few ultra-Orthodox Jews, who typically shun television. Neither brother owns a TV.

Ultra-Orthodox Jews, who make up about 10 percent of Israel's population of 8 million, have at times become aggressive in their efforts to impose their norms in public spaces. Most reject modern media and technology, and they are largely absent from the melting pots of the military and the secular workplace. Instead, they tend to stay in their cloistered communities and maintain a simple, pious way of life.

The issue also has seeped into music. Religious soldiers have walked out of military events in which women were singing – which extremely devout Jews believe is contrary to Jewish law.

However, Arie Gat said there was no prohibition preventing him and his brother from performing before women, saying it is all right for women to cheer for them but not to dance.

"We checked out the whole issue of participating in the show in Jewish law," he said. "It's not like we jumped into rumbling waters without checking the temperature. ... From the perspective of Jewish law, there's no problem with what we are doing."

NOTICE OF A PUBLIC MEETING TO INSTITUE A SUMMER PROPERTY TAX LEVY

Covert Public Schools
35323 M-140 Highway,
Covert, Michigan 49043
Telephone: (269) 764-3701

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that on November 11, 2013, at 6:00 p.m. in the High School Library at 35323 M-140 Highway, Covert, Michigan 49043, the Covert Public Schools Board of Education will hold a public meeting at which a resolution will be proposed for adoption to impose a summer property tax levy of 100% of its annual school tax levy upon property located within the Covert Public Schools school district.

Adoption of the proposed resolution would result in the annual levy of school property taxes on July 1 on property located within the Covert Public Schools school district. The Board of Education is authorized under Public Act 451 of 1976, as amended, to impose a summer property tax levy of all of the annual school property taxes. If a summer property tax levy is imposed, the school district may enter into agreements with each city or township in which it lies, or the county treasurer, for collection of the summer property taxes, or it may collect such taxes itself.

This notice is given by order of the Board of Education.

HOROSCOPE

By BERNICE BEDE OSOL

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 2

Don't sit back when taking a progressive, front-and-center position will open doors. Let your imagination run wild and your determination lead the way. This is a year to make things happen and do things your way. You can build your dream and secure your position.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Stay on top of any situation that has the potential to run amuck. Extravagance or overindulgence could interfere with your progress. Keep it simple and within your budget.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Look for openings to present what you have to offer. Following through on your promises must be your intent, or you will damage your reputation. If you make a pledge, keep it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Everyone will bend to what you want, but you must be careful to keep everything transparent and out in the open. Keep your record clean. You have too much to lose and everything to gain.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You will have to remain focused if you intend to do your own thing and avoid interference. Be ready to make an unexpected change that will throw anyone challenging you off track.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) If you can dream it, you can get it right now by using your intuition, imagination and determination. The sky is the limit, so shoot for the stars.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Sign up for something with the intent to win. Your heart is ready to explore any avenue that promises equality. A personal gain is based on what you have to offer.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Being forthright and ready to take action will show your strength and courage, moving you into a position of control. A partnership will help you appreciate unfamiliar traditions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Base what you do next on what motivates you the most. Refuse to take care of demands and responsibilities that don't belong to you. You will call the shots and reap the rewards.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If you take part in an event that teaches you something, it will encourage you to engage in activities with people who will enrich your life. An opportunity will begin with friendship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Your emotions will spin out of control if you let little things get to you. Leave your routine behind and enjoy the company of someone who is fun to be with.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You will learn something valuable if you observe others. Attending a conference or lecture will lead to an informative discussion with someone who can help you restructure an idea with successful results.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Don't give in to aggressive behavior. Set your own strategy and move in a direction that allows you to use your skills and to enjoy life's more toothsome moments.
